About This Test

Dehydroepiandrosterone sulfate (DHEAS) measures the level of DHEAS in the blood. DHEAS is a steroid hormone produced primarily by the adrenal glands, with smaller amounts produced by the gonads and brain. It serves as a precursor to androgens and estrogens, the male and female sex hormones. Measuring DHEAS levels helps evaluate adrenal gland function and can aid in diagnosing conditions related to hormone imbalances, such as adrenal tumors, adrenal insufficiency, polycystic ovary syndrome (PCOS), and certain types of congenital adrenal hyperplasia (CAH). Elevated or decreased levels can indicate various health issues.
