About This Test

An allergy panel is a diagnostic test used to identify specific allergens that may be causing allergic reactions. These panels can be categorized based on the type of allergens included, such as vegetarian or non-vegetarian allergens. Vegetarian Allergy Panel: - Definition: Tests for allergies to plant-based substances. This panel typically includes allergens from fruits, vegetables, nuts, seeds, grains, and pollen from plants. - Purpose: Identifies reactions to common vegetarian allergens, helping individuals manage symptoms related to foods or environmental factors of plant origin. Non-Vegetarian Allergy Panel: - Definition: Tests for allergies to animal-based substances. This panel usually includes allergens from meats, fish, shellfish, eggs, and dairy products. - Purpose: Detects sensitivities or allergies to common animal-derived foods and proteins, aiding in the management of allergic reactions to animal products. Both panels use blood tests or skin prick tests to measure specific IgE antibodies or immune responses to the included allergens, helping diagnose and manage allergies effectively.
