About This Test

An iron profile measures various aspects of iron metabolism in the body. It typically includes tests for serum iron (the amount of iron in the blood), ferritin (iron storage levels), transferrin (the protein that carries iron in the blood), and total iron-binding capacity (TIBC, the blood's ability to bind and transport iron). This profile helps diagnose and monitor conditions like iron deficiency anemia, anemia of chronic disease, and iron overload disorders. It provides insights into how well iron is being absorbed and utilized.
