About This Test

A serum amoebic IgG test measures the concentration of Immunoglobulin G (IgG) antibodies specific to Entamoeba histolytica, the parasite responsible for amoebiasis. Elevated levels of serum amoebic IgG indicate exposure to or infection with Entamoeba histolytica. This test is used to diagnose amoebic infections, especially in cases where clinical symptoms suggest an infection but stool tests might be inconclusive. It helps confirm a diagnosis and determine whether an infection is recent or has been present for a longer period.
