About This Test

A fecal calprotectin stool test measures the concentration of calprotectin, a protein found in white blood cells, in the stool. Elevated levels of calprotectin indicate inflammation in the gastrointestinal tract, which can be a sign of conditions such as inflammatory bowel disease (IBD), including Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis. The test helps differentiate between inflammatory and non-inflammatory causes of gastrointestinal symptoms, monitor disease activity, and assess response to treatment. It is useful for diagnosing and managing chronic gastrointestinal conditions.
