About This Test

Apo B (Apolipoprotein B) measures the level of this protein in the blood, which is a key component of low-density lipoprotein (LDL) and other atherogenic lipoproteins. Apo B is crucial for assessing cardiovascular risk, as it reflects the number of potentially harmful lipoprotein particles that can contribute to plaque buildup in the arteries. High levels of Apo B are associated with an increased risk of heart disease. This test helps evaluate overall heart health and guide treatment strategies.
