About This Test

B-type natriuretic peptide (BNP) measures the level of BNP in the blood, a hormone produced by the heart's ventricles. BNP levels increase when the heart is under stress and struggling to pump blood effectively, such as in heart failure. Measuring BNP helps diagnose and assess the severity of heart failure, differentiate cardiac from non-cardiac causes of symptoms like shortness of breath, and guide treatment decisions. Elevated BNP levels indicate worsening heart function and fluid overload.
