About This Test

An ionized calcium test measures the level of free calcium ions in the blood, which are not bound to proteins. This form of calcium is biologically active and crucial for various bodily functions, including muscle contraction, nerve function, and blood clotting. The test provides a more accurate reflection of calcium status than total calcium levels, especially in conditions affecting protein levels or pH balance. It's particularly useful in diagnosing and managing conditions like hypocalcemia, hypercalcemia, and parathyroid disorders.
