About This Test

The Cryptosporidium Antigen, Stool test is a diagnostic test used to detect infection caused by the parasite Cryptosporidium in the intestines. This parasite commonly spreads through contaminated food or water and can lead to a condition called cryptosporidiosis. The test works by identifying specific antigens (proteins) of the parasite a stool sample. It is more sensitive and faster than traditional microscopic examination, making it useful for early and accurate diagnosis. This test is usually recommende for individuals experiencing symptoms such as watery diarrhea, abdominal cramps, nausea, vomiting, and dehydration. It is especially important for people with weakene immune systems, as the infection can be more severe. A fresh stool sample is collected in a clean container and sent to the laboratory for analysis. No fasting is required for this test. Proper sample collection helps ensure accurate results and timely diagnosis of the infection.
