About This Test

The GCT (Glucose Challenge Test) 2 hours is a screening test used to evaluate how well your body processes glucose, commonly performed during pregnancy to check for gestational diabetes. The test involves drinking a glucose solution and then measuring blood glucose levels at a specific time—usually two hours later. In a typical procedure, a person consumes a glucose drink, and blood is drawn two hours after ingestion to assess glucose levels. High blood glucose levels after this period can indicate glucose intolerance or diabetes. This test helps identify individuals who may need further testing or intervention to manage blood sugar levels and prevent complications.
