About This Test

The HIV Western blot test is a diagnostic tool used to confirm the presence of HIV infection. It detects specific proteins (antigens) produced by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) in the blood. After separating proteins through gel electrophoresis, they are transferred onto a membrane and probed with antibodies specif to HIV proteins. A positive result indicates the presence of HIV-specific antibodies, confirming an HIV infection. This test is often used as a follow-up to initial screening tests.
