About This Test

Typhi Dot IgM Test- is a blood test used to help detect typhoid fever, which is caused by the bacteria Typhoid fever (Salmonella typhi). This test checks for IgM antibodies, which are usually produced by the body during the early stage of infection. It helps doctors identify recent or active typhoid infections quickly. A small blood sample is collected from a vein and sent to the laboratory for testing. Fasting is generally ,not required, unless your doctor advises otherwise. Symptoms that may lead to this test include prolonged fever, weakness, stomach pain, headache, vomiting, or loss of appetite. The Typhi Dot IgM test provides faster results compared to traditional blood culture tests, but doctors may recommend additional tests for confirmation.
