About This Test

Urine cytology measures the presence and characteristics of cells in the urine. It is primarily used to detect abnormal or cancerous cells, particularly in the urinary tract, including the bladder, ureters, and kidneys. By examining urine samples under a microscope, urine cytology can help diagnose conditions such as bladder cancer, identify infections or inflammation, and monitor changes in cells over time. It is often used as a part of diagnostic and follow-up evaluations for patients with suspected or known urinary tract cancers.
